What's the matter with the Marion county coal men? They could dispose of their coal before they get to town at present.

At a political meeting in Puerto Rico three men were killed and a number of others wounded. Politics is politics wherever you find it.

The latest competitor to the coal trust is the brick, a certain kind of which, when soaked a few moments in coal oil, is said to produce enough fire to cook a meal.

It is astonishing the advance that Jasper has made during the past year. And the present indications point to a continuance in her forward movement for some time to come.

The big coal strike has gotten to a point where something is liable to “drop”—if it hasn't already “dropped” before this meets the eyes of the reader. The people are long suffering, but there comes a time “when patience ceases to be a virtue,” and then something unusual happens.

At last the courts are getting after the “Buckfoot” fake racing fraternity of Webb City. One R. E. Hobbs has just been awarded judgement for $5,317 against the gang, including a Webb City bank. This would indicate that this disgraceful combination had seen its best days in Jasper county.

Webb City, which is supposed to be Democratic, held an election last week and elected a number of Republicans. The Republicans of the county are jubilant, as they look upon it as a straw telling the way the wind is blowing in to county affairs. However the Democrats do not see it in that light, but attribute the result of the Webb City election to local causes.

David B. Hall's Platform from the Chicago Record-Herald.

The platform adopted by the Democracy of New York was a fine platform obviously constructed for national use. It contains a full expression of opinion upon all the great national issues except silver and its silence on silver is as eloquent as any of its published paragraphs. Evidently the ex-senator is still in the field as a candidate for a presidential nomination. More than that he is a very active candidate, bent on commanding himself and his principles to the convention of 1904.

The resolutions include declarations for the national ownership and operation of the anthracite coal mines, a tariff for revenue only, with “protection” for the consumer, severe laws against trusts and their severe execution, and the election of United States senators by direct vote of the people. Immediate revision of the tariff is said to be the supreme duty of the hour, and it is suggested as a remedy for trusts that those projects of trusts which are essential to the life, comfort and necessities of the people should be put upon the free list.

What is proposed is not necessarily despicable! Sometimes the thing once considered despicable proves of value. The upper peninsula of Michigan was long tossed between that state and Wisconsin, wanted by neither, and refused as a separate territory by the United States. During the last quarter century it has become, through its copper, iron and forests, a tract of enormous value. Alaska repeats the story. It was purchased from Russia for $7,000,000 for political reasons, and was supposed to be worthless commercially, save for its seal fishery. Yet it now produces $20,000,000 a year in gold; its salmon fisheries promise in a few years to be worth many millions; its valuable forests are practically priceless in timber and wood pulp for the manufacture of paper. The fact that the United States, as its West India islands have been termed, may be of clay, but its Alaskan head is almost literally fine gold.

“Beware the woman who overwhelms you with affectionate epithets!” This is the dictum of Miss White, president of the Dressmakers’ association, to an assembly of the sisterhood in New York. “Never mind how many consines and aunts they are going to send you. Make them pay a half deposit down. You’ll have your fobs anyway. You might better have it early and

Current Comment

Chinese Minister Wu Ting-Pang's conclusion that this is a country where respect for the man who works, fact that he works for his living is a keen recognition of the American secret of national strength and prosperous development. Such a comment upon this salient phase of American life is also in line with the recent report of a British commission appointed to investigate American trade conditions. In which the fact was dwelt on that there is no leisure class in this country, an American man who has no occupation and no useful aim in life being “as a fish out of water.” The meaning of these truths, notes the St. Louis Republic, is that labor is respected in the United States as the basis of national greatness and character, and that the professional idle, the millionaire or trump, is justly regarded as an element of weakness in the social system. This attitude toward labor must be maintained if we are to remain a great and forceful people. When we cease to respect the man who works and to condemn the dawdling parasite the day of American degeneration and national decline will have dawned.

“Do a large portion of the sons of ministers not turn out as well as the sons of other people?” This was the interesting question discussed by the Society of the Sons of Ministers of the Church of Scotland, at its recent session in Glasgow. The chief speaker, who is the moderator of the general assembly, declared that the “sons of the manse” have given more ornaments to art, literature and science than any other class. It is probable that any American who takes the trouble to count up the sons of ministers known to him, and weigh them in the balance, will come to the same conclusion.

In four short stories written by different authors and published within a year in periodicals of excellent standing, the same central idea has been developed—the lamentable error of judgment that led dog to carry a stick of dynamite to a man. No one of these writers copied any of the others. Probably, however, all of them owed their inspiration to an actual incident of a British Columbia mining camp which first got into print in Spokane. The occurrence is of interest as showing how keen a watch for “material” is kept up by literary men.

Ryan Hanson, son of a farmer, was proud to belong to “that kernel of the nation, the cultivated and cultivating class of society.” Doubtless many persons of pretensions, learning that the farmers of the United States will probably realize good money from the current cereal crop, would themselves like to belong to the “cultivating” class.

Appendicitis is not a new disease. A history of the malady, prepared by a French specialist, records the testimony of a mommy to the antiquity of the affliction. The indication is that the death, thousands of years ago, was due to germs that had its origin in a diseased appendix.

The man who, according to the Milwaukee Sentinel, tied dynamite to his sick dog and left his house when the animal wagged his tail, has by this time learned that cruelty does not pay.

Stricken With Paralysis.

Henderson Grinnell, of this place, was stricken with partial paralysis and completely lost the use of one arm and side. After being treated by an eminent physician for quite a while without relief, my wife recommended Chamberlain’s Pain Balm, and after using two bottles of it he is almost entirely cured. Geo. R. McDonald, Man., Logan county, W. Va. Several other very remarkable cases of partial paralysis have been effected by the use of this salve. It is most widely known, however, as a cure, as a cure for rheumatism, sprains and bruises. Sold by Webb Drug and Hardware Co.
